A Message from our Public Health Nurse

A 'strep throat' is a throat infection caused by the Group A Streptococcus (GAS). The strep throat bacteria are highly infectious. It can be spread when the infected person coughs or sneezes.

A strep throat infection can lead to rheumatic fever, even if it's the first time or a one-off. The risk of getting rheumatic fever gets higher when a person suffers from repeated untreated strep throat infections.

If strep throat is confirmed, children must stay home for 24 hours after starting antibiotic therapy.

If you have any concerns regarding your child, please see your doctor.
